

ART & PHOTOGRAPHY ONLINE CONTEST

THEME: Creative Minds During Quarantine

Just because we are all currently trapped during the COVID-19 pandemic does not mean that we all need to stop creating. During this period, we have asked artists to present their works in relation to this situation, always prioritizing the aesthetics, originality and creativity of their work.

The artists were asked to submit drawings, photography and paintings that expressed the impact of the COVID-19 crisis and social distancing measures in their homes and neighbourhoods. We want to thank all the artists who sent us their artwork and that participated in our contest. Above all, stay at home and take care of yourself and your loved ones.

Title: Buy the World

Category: Creative Art

Description: Arms trailing a ball of simple and enjoyable things from the outside world on black pages from magazines on a painted canvas from the streets of Madrid.

The canvas rested in my room for months. It was going to be used for a collaboration project with a friend of mine who is a painter, but alas, we are quarantined. The black background was inspired by a goldmine of black pages I found in a music magazine. I thought about how to theme the piece for these strange times and while being confined in the walls of my Madrid apartment, I think emotionally, I gravitated towards the things I miss. The collection of positivity in the centre was almost going to take the shape of a heart, but I thought a circle embodied similar feelings of love. My original idea was to have the globe held by one big hand made of smaller hands; and I started in that direction. After putting together a few fingers, I felt it wasn't the right direction for the piece. A hand should be slender, mine was shaping up to be clunky. I have learned many times in collage, that my best results come from respecting each cut-out and trying to get the maximum out of each image; the hand idea required too much manipulation for my style. The hand transitioned into a free flowing trail.

This pandemic is testing our generosity and altruism. It feels like a lesson in learning to care for one another; to share. We are not at war, there are no zombies or aliens, and supply lines are maintaining output so far. Selfish behaviour is ugly and nonsensical, capitalism is a bust for prosperity, and we are experiencing an opportunity to reflect on our values, both individually and on a societal level. News is a bit of a black void these days, however, the stories that spotlight individual acts of kindness give me some hope. If you add all of those gestures together, they are impactful and help bridge the time until we get back to things we might not have realized we love so much.

Title: Waiting for the end of the nightmare

Description: This nightmare is a mini-project created using the aerial plants of the tillandsia family. the living plant interacting with the eggshell finds its habitat. here the plant is taken up in a small pandemic still life shot. the image ironically evokes the covered face of a person, forced to use these masks and the out of control situation of his hair, in which in this period of live television from China showed us our beloved TV correspondent Giovanna B. this is an ironic still life, linked to the Easter period and the covid-19 pandemic we are experiencing.

Title: Till the Sun Rises and sets
Category: Drawing/Paint/Art creative
Description: I was thinking of how everyday during quarantine would feel if my family was complete. that moment when the sun rises and the moment it sets. we would be doing the same cycle, maybe, but it would be really fun. since we are a number of 10 in the family, then many things can be done. like playing board games or singing as one (since we all sing), or watch TV movies, we love that. horror, comedy, family stories. But because we are apart from my three brothers and my father, I wanted to imagine having them during this pandemic. Where we stay in one roof.

Category: Creative Art

Description: Since I am a Psych Major and during this quarantine, mental health and mental health disorders is becoming an issue, I have created "The Asylum of Awareness" to prove that not all disabilities are visible and that it is something that can overcome easily. I just also realized that awareness is very significant because I have noticed that some people do not understand the situation of being mentally challenged so, awareness is the key. So, overall, I am promoting a mental health awareness. Mentally challenged person do not need to be judged, they need to be understood.

Title: Evergreen/Evermore
Category: Drawing/Paint
Description:

This piece was made using an acrylic background and a paper cut out of a drawing I made. It is coloured with copic markers. The girl depicted is suffering from nostalgia. Her heart aches for something she used to have/someone she used to be. She misses when things were evergreen and when the world felt wide. Like all good things, it came to an end, and she still dreams of the future she never got to have (evermore). I made this shortly after I moved cities. I left my home from which I grew up for 10 years and all the friends I'd made. I had a future, a plan, an idea of what I wanted. And then it was taken from me in the blink of an eye. The theme is bitter, but I'm proud of the truth it stands for. Most people deal with this at some point in time, and it's ok to feel that way. All in all, nostalgia sucks sometimes.
